1. Brain Pop:  www.brainpop.com
   This site lists educational movies by subject area. I really like this site because it has an English section. In this section it has some grammar movies. I am doing grammar with my students and am always looking for ways to make it more exciting.

2. Education World:  http://www.educationworld.com/
   This site is one of those do all, be all sites. This site has information for teachers that includes: professional development, grants, technology integration (that even has templates you can download), contests, and a reference library. For an ESL teacher it has a worksheet library with an English section that has some great worksheets and activities. It also has an Internet Scavenger Hunt. I have used one of their scavenger hunts and the students really seemed to like it.

   This site is specifically for ESL teachers or ESL students. This site has a lot of information. Some of the sections I find most helpful are: the quizzes (in different subject areas, including English), phrasal verbs, idioms, and a hint of the day that is great to teach the kids. I really like the idioms section because a lot of people forget about teaching idioms to ESL students.

4. Activities for ESL Students:  http://a4esl.org/
   This site has what its name says, activities for ESL students. What I like about this site is that it is set up in levels: easy, medium, and difficult. This is helpful since we usually have different levels of students. The site has quizzes and puzzles. The other nice thing is that it is set up so you can use html, JavaScript, or Flash.

5. Scholastic:  http://teacher.scholastic.com/
   I have used this site a couple of times also. I has a great form that you simply choose the grade level and subject area and it takes you to lesson plans and activities for that area. I used this site when my students were doing an activity for National Hispanic Heritage month.

   This is one of my favorite sites. This site has a puzzle maker. A teacher can type in words and clues and have a crossword puzzle made. You can also make a word search or a number of other puzzles.
7. Miscositas: www.miscositas.com
   This is unlike any site I have ever found. This site has virtual picture books in English, Spanish, and French. Along with the picture book comes a lesson plan and vocabulary. The vocabulary is set up so that each definition is concise and has an accompanying picture on a PowerPoint slide. This helps students to see the story that is being read.

   If you don’t have text books, this is a great place to go for definitions of English topics. This site has anything you would want to know about English from grammar to writing paragraphs to research. The site has definitions on these different subjects that you can teach the students. It also includes quizzes, PowerPoint shows, a dictionary, awards, and much more.

   The two things I really liked on this site are the Internet Scavenger Hunts and the puzzles/projects. I used one of the scavenger hunts from her site. I thought it was really interesting. I think the students enjoyed using the computers and learning more about the US.

10. Ed Helper: www.edhelper.com
    This site has both webquests and lesson plans. Not only does it have them in different disciplines, but it also has them for ESL. You can search the subjects for lessons or webquests. I like the holiday one also. Under the English section you can specify your search for what aspect you are looking for (ie. Grammar).

11. History Channel: http://www.historychannel.com/classroom/classroom.html
    I have grown to love this site. I have done a unit on Hispanic Heritage month from this site. They really take a lot of time to put things together for teachers. Under the Hispanic Heritage month link, they had shows you could view on their channel, they had links to other sites, they had history, food, etc. They basically tried to find a link or information for anything having to do with the topic. I liked the fact that they were up to date with it. It was information that was happening right now.

12. English Club: http://www.englishclub.com/
    This site is specifically for ESL teachers, learners, and schools. It can be used by teachers as a resource, or a student can come and learn about English. It has some really cool features. Some of the features include: grammar, pronunciation, vocabulary, listening, forums, games, chat rooms, quizzes, pen pals, and jokes. Everything is specifically for the ESL learner.
